The medal was awarded in silver to officers and high-ranking town officials, and in bronze to other ranks and citizens who participated in the defence.

In Forsyth's roll, eighteen recipients of the silver medal are listed including one to Pay Sgt H Rodda, the only other rank to receive a silver medal. The roll indicates that 537 men qualified for the bronze medal.

Approximate values of named example complete with suspension:

Silver: $5,500

Bronze: $1,500

Medals with the QSA and/or KSA are worth considerably more.

Okiep (modern spelling) is a small town in Namaqualand in the Northern Cape. The area around Okiep was known for a time to be rich in copper. Mining commenced in about 1850 and the Cape Copper Company was established there in 1888.

The town was besieged in the last stages of the war from 4 April to 4 May 1902 by Boer forces under General Jan Smuts. The garrison of O'okiep, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel W.A.D. Shelton DSO, consisted of some 900 men, mostly local miners, who assisted Shelton's troops. At the end of the war campaign medals (QSA, KSA) were awarded to regular troops, not to civilians. The Cape Copper Company decided to have this medal made unofficially and award it to all the people who had undertaken the defence of the town.
